

My Wife Thinks You're Dead

Junior Brown 1995

[A] It's good to see you baby. It's been a long-long while.
We're both a whole lot older, and seen a lot of miles.
But [D] things are really different now, since the good old days.
And [A] you've been in some trouble since we went our separate ways.
We'll [E7] have to say hello maybe some [D] other time instead.
Cause you're [A] wanted by the Police.
And [E7] my wife thinks you're [A] dead.

[A] Somebody spread the rumor, that you had lost your life.
That's the way I heard it, and what I told my wife.
Now [D] here you're showing up again, and talk is getting round.
And [A] I can see that one of us will have to leave this town.
If you [E7] think that I want trouble, then [D] you're crazy in your head.
Cause you're [A] wanted by the Police.
And [E7] my wife thinks you're [A] dead.

{solo}

[A] You never called or wrote me, just up and disappeared.
Nobody knew what happened, where you been for all these years.
Well, [D] trouble's what you're looking like. So trouble where you been.
And [A] I can see the kind of trouble you could get me in.
You better [E7] pay attention, to [D] every word I said.
Cause you're [A] wanted by the Police.
And [E7] my wife thinks you're [A] dead.

{solo}

[A] So goodbye to you baby. I'm glad we got to talk.
But I'm faithful to my wife, and I don't ever break the law.
I [D] don't know where you're headed for. But I know where you been.
We [A] reminisced. Now let's just go our separate ways again.
Go find [E7] another ex-sweetheart to [D] hang around instead.
Cause you're [A] wanted by the Police.
And [E7] my wife thinks you're [A] dead.

I said you're wanted by the Police.
And [E7] my wife thinks you're [A] dead.
